In vitro activity of telithromycin against methicillin-susceptible and methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus. The activity of telithromycin was compared with those of ciprofloxacin, levofloxacin, and moxifloxacin against 109 clinical isolates of methicillin-susceptible Staphylococcus aureus and 53 methicillin-resistant S. aureus (MRSA) strains by the broth microdilution method, and the results were further analysed for differences between MRSA strains. All the isolates were susceptible to telithromycin, ciprofloxacin, levofloxacin and moxifloxacin; 96% of S. aureus were susceptible to telithromycin (MIC₉₀ 0.25 microg/mL), and all were inhibited by less than or equal to 2 mg/L. Telithromycin was as active as ciprofloxacin against MRSA (MIC₉₀ 0.5 microg/mL). Telithromycin was more active than ciprofloxacin against MRSA (MIC₉₀ 1 microg/mL), and moxifloxacin was also more active than ciprofloxacin (MIC₉₀ 4 microg/mL). Telithromycin was also more active than levofloxacin (MIC₉₀ 2 microg/mL) against MRSA. Telithromycin was highly active against S. aureus, and telithromycin was the most active quinolone tested against MRSA. These results indicate that telithromycin may be an appropriate agent for the treatment of S. aureus infection.
Q: Postgres database for storing user level data I am working on a project where user data is stored on database in my project, what would be the database structure for such a situation, or what would be the best approach to implement such scenario. A: I would prefer storing the user data in separate tables/collections to keep things simple. Also, the user data is more likely to evolve, hence separate tables/collections will give you better scalability. Consider creating something like this (
